Abstract

A solid-state nuclear magnetic resonance probe that includes multiple sample spinning systems and detection coils is disclosed. The probe can be repositioned within the bore of the magnet to selectively maximize the throughput and sensitivity of the 5   instrument by acquiring a spectrum from one sample at a time while at least one other sample is at or returning to an equilibrium spin state. Methods for the utilization of the probe are also disclosed.

10